I'm a grown little man DVR-MSv.(CNN) US President Donald Trump has signed off on the creation of a new military branch aimed at combating the use of online extremist content in the Middle East, according to a senior administration official. The Cyber Defense Operations Group will be led by US Cyber Command and will be in charge of what the official described as a first-of-its-kind counter-extremist military strategy. The Pentagon is currently tasked with combating the rising threat of conventional weapons, but this new group will handle information warfare, the official said, adding: "This is a new approach to counter threat in the space of information. This is going to create confusion and disorientation in the adversary's mind." The official said it is the beginning of a new era in which the Pentagon is developing plans to address the strategic challenges of the modern battlefield. "I think what we're seeing is a retooling in the way in which we see cyber as something strategic -- not just something we respond to -- that's a substantial change," the official said. The official did not provide specifics of the new branch and said the official talks should be taken with caution. "I think it's one of the most significant changes," the official said. A reported internal Pentagon document reviewed by CNN also said the Cyber Defense Group will work with existing US Cyber Command, which was established in May 2010, and focus on "detecting, monitoring, and defending against cyber attacks." "The group will have the authority to coordinate, and execute against, threats to the domain," the document said. The official also said the decision on the creation of the military branch is part of a larger strategic review of the department and its response to cyber attacks on US military facilities overseas. The document said US Cyber Command believes the threat of cyber attacks "on those systems provides an asymmetric capability and are increasing in their use against US and allied forces abroad." The official said the military is not being told to develop specific plans, but the department is working on the establishment of an interagency working group. "We're not developing plans right now, we're developing tools," the official said. The official said the department's goal is to have a system to share information with other agencies such
